10:45 Making sustainability measurable: CO₂ targets as a driver of the building turnaround

How can we make sustainable building the standard? While CO₂ limits per square meter are already set in building regulations in other countries, Germany is still in its beginnings. This panel will discuss what regulatory impulses, tools and decision-making mechanisms are needed to make sustainability measurable, comparable - and therefore a matter of course.

14:30 Blockchain & Smart Contracts - How digital contracts are revolutionizing real estate financing

The real estate industry is on the verge of a technological turning point: blockchain-based processes enable transparent, secure and automated contract processing for the first time - from financing and notary appointments to land register entry. But how much of the future is already in the present? Our experts discuss real-life use cases, regulatory hurdles and the potential for digital transactions at the touch of a button.

DISCUSSION

15:45 Sustainable project development through digital transformation

While digital tools have long had the potential to make processes more efficient, transparent and climate-friendly, project development often remains analog - and therefore inefficient and resource-intensive. In this panel, our experts will discuss how digitalization can transform business models and processes to ensure that sustainability becomes the standard rather than the exception. What technologies, data strategies and regulatory frameworks are needed to make sustainability in project development measurable, controllable and economically attractive?
